To Whom It May Concern,

I have known Andrew Robitaille as an eLearning Integration Teacher at Good News Lutheran School since 2003 when he took over a problematic teaching situation very professionally. He has taught five of my six children over several years and at various ages. He is currently teaching my three youngest children who simply adore him. My children all consistently reflect on him as being one of our school's most gifted teachers. I have found him to be a most outstanding teacher and role model in all respects.

Andrew appreciates the value of educating the whole person. He has an enquiring mind and he demonstrates a genuine passion for learning across a wide range of disciplines. I have truly admired his diligence and consistent application to his teaching responsibilities over the past five years. Andrew is more than just a friendly face at our school; he is consistently available, helpful and sincere in his dealings with parents, students and staff.

In addition to his classroom responsibilities, Andrew involves himself wholeheartedly in a range of extra-curricular activities, such as lunchtime computer clubs, photography, and editing for the annual school magazine. He is very keen to provide assistance to students (and sometimes, parents) who need support in their eLearning and general classroom assignments in his own time. Using his excellent knowledge of technology and his skills in the disciplines of English and Creative Arts, he has also been responsible for maintaining sections of the school website and the excellent on-line learning programs accessed through school and home computers to members of our school community.

A cheerful and outgoing, yet thoughtful teacher, Andrew is always ready to provide support where it is needed. His manner is always gracious and dignified, revealing a fine blend of modesty and confidence. He has excellent classroom management resulting from his relaxed approach with firm boundaries. Andrew has an innate sensitivity and a sense of appropriateness: his treatment of others is always affirming and respectful. He is a discreet and reliable teacher of the highest integrity.

I am pleased to write in support of Andrew. He will be greatly missed at our school, but his decision to be nearer to his family reflects his loyal nature. I wish him all the very best for his future.

Yours sincerely,

Michelle Gibson
